The Cohen samon commission has come under fire from several quarters. Its credibility is already being questioned. Last week Conservative MP John Cummins challenged the credibility of a panel of scientists that is providing advice to the commission. He claims that four of the six scientists are in conflicts of interest because of past ties to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. This week participants funding is inadequate given the massive number of internal government documents to be released, the scope of the inquiry and the need to cross examine witnesses.

complained
